Please describe these expenses	-$627 for distribution event banner as an in-kind donation from James Julian Advertising. -AHA built a custom-designed 38 foot long trailer for animal emergency response and we have purchased a heavy-duty F350 truck, both are permanently based in New Jersey for the specific purpose of providing animal emergency services to those in the region. AHA also hired one permanent Animal Emergency Services staff member (who has experience in emergency services relief, training, and volunteer coordination) based in NJ who will service areas that were impacted by Hurricane Sandy. Having a truck, specially-designed trailer, and emergency services staffer based in the greater New York/New Jersey/Philadelphia area will allow AHA to provide much faster animal emergency relief services for the next disaster in the area where our help is needed. For example, with Hurricane Sandy, it took AHA days to mobilize and drive our 82 foot rescue rig, based in Denver, to Eastern Pennsylvania. However, with this new truck, trailer, and staffer, we expect to be able to respond to disasters in the greater New York/New Jersey/Philadelphia area within hours of a request for assistance. In addition, the staff member will be training volunteers in the Northeast region on specific animal emergency matters (e.g., specially-designed courses in basic first responder animal emergency services first responder training and disaster sheltering for companion animals), which will help the area prepare for future incidents. Estimated total costs for these disaster-related preventative measures for those communities affected by Hurricane Sandy and others in the area (including costs of the trailer, truck, supplies, maintenance, licenses, fees and other costs, and five years of a staffer's salary and related overhead) is $680,000. The additional $62,794 described above that was raised in connection with AHA's Hurricane Sandy efforts covers a small fraction of that cost.
